General description: Keyboards of special sets are indispensable for a working computer. There are many specialized sets, each with its own advantages, and most of these keyboards have specific functions, like for example the introduction of new keywords, the special functionality for system maintenance, or shortcuts for mouse control. But the functions differ from keyboard to keyboard. Keyboard: The peripheral machine's keyboard is the most common in everyday use, and also the most familiar to the user. It offers the most reliable and simple control. It is very often supported with special software to facilitate mouse use, and it is easily accessible. A keyboard is a self-contained unit. It does not have a special key setting. The keys are directly connected to the computer's microprocessor, and the keyboard controller is built into the computer's motherboard. Most keyboards use a rubber membrane that translates the key contact to the corresponding signals for the computer's microprocessor. The keys are usually arranged in a simple matrix of 1x4 or 2x4, i.e. a few tens of keys along the row. LED matrix: LED matrix keyboards are preferred by many people for their high quality. It is the successor to the old-fashioned X- and Z- key backlit membrane keyboards. LED matrix keyboards are used to a greater extent in the professional environment. But LED matrix keyboards are more expensive than a rubber membrane keyboard. Special keyboard function: Some keyboards come with special functions. These are often found in the "function" key row. Examples are the first column, which holds frequently used combinations of letters, and the short keys for entering the letters. Other keyboards are equipped with a special hard key. These are necessary for laptop owners when they want to use their keyboard on a desktop computer. 3 Screensaver by Seonwoo Yoo. 12 images of animals to decorate your screen while you're not busy. HKEY_CURRENT_USER\Software\Microsoft\Windows\CurrentVersion\Explorer\Advanced The HKEY_CURRENT_USER\Software\Microsoft\Windows\CurrentVersion\Explorer\Advanced key should contain a string like this: If you can't find out when the new year starts on your calendar, you'll be in good company. The 2016 New Year started at 12:00:00 on Friday, January 1, 2017. That means the day has been named as January 1, or Common Era 2016 (CE2016), although it was actually the last day of the year in the Julian calendar, which was the calendar in use in much of the Roman Empire. For most, the start of the year should be on January 1 in the Gregorian calendar. But the Catholic Church decided to switch to the Gregorian calendar in 1582, and a few countries have continued to use the Julian calendar in the 21st century. To help you remember, here's a list of what year is it: When did we switch from the Julian to the Gregorian calendar? The Gregorian calendar, which is the basis for modern European calendars, was first introduced in 1582, but it wasn't widely used until the early 1800s. There were two major reasons why it took so long to catch on: 1. The new calendar had been decided in the middle of the war, and was seen as a way to unite the continent under a single, less bloody ruler. 2. The church didn't like the fact the New Year was a Thursday, and that certain saints' days fell on the same day in different
